Shelters have great resources but many don't have a good way to assess that adopters are matched with animals that suit their living situations or experience, this leads to high return rates.